Chicago police chief out, force faces review over black teen's death

CHICAGO | BY MARY WISNIEWSKI

Chicago Police Superintendent Garry McCarthy speaks at a news conference in Chicago, Illinois in this September 3, 2013 file photo. McCarthy was fired December 1, 2015, after it took 13 months to charge a white police officer with the shooting death of a black teenager,...

Chicago's police chief was ousted on Tuesday after days of protest over a white officer's shooting of a black teenager 16 times and the department's refusal to release a video of the killing for more than a year.

Mayor Rahm Emanuel announced during a news conference that he had asked Garry McCarthy, police superintendent since May 2011, to resign. The mayor also said he was creating a new police accountability task force.

The white officer, Jason Van Dyke, was charged a week ago with first-degree murder in the killing of Laquan McDonald. The video was released on the same day.
High-profile killings of black men at the hands of mainly white law enforcement officials in U.S. cities have fueled demonstrations for some two years, stoking a national debate on race relations and police tactics.

The mayor, a Democrat and the former chief of staff to U.S. President Barack Obama, said
